About The Conference

The Department of Economics of University of Kalyani is going to hold a two-day National Conference on Contemporary Issues in Economic Development during 18th and 19th March 2025. The conference aims at providing a broad platform for mutual interactions on issues pertaining to economic development in our contemporary time. They include various issues pertaining to political economic debates surrounding development; economic development from the sectoral perspectives like agriculture, industry and services; external dimensions of development in a small open economy like India in the present-day neoliberal context; transitional debates regarding development as is observed today in various parts of the world in the backdrop of present day globalization, liberalization and privatization; gender aspects of development, labour market and development, development and the social sector and issues pertaining to inclusivity and sustainability. Today's economic development is shaped by different economic, political, cultural and natural factors around the globe. Hence, apart from bringing debates and discussions among the academicians and scholars of Economics the conference will make an attempt to garner a multi-disciplinary approach to those debates and interactions. Today's development cannot be debated holistically unless the issues pertaining to inclusivity and sustainability are touched upon and hence the conference will thrive to put special emphasis on inclusive development and development from the perspective of natural environment. Also, today's discussions on economic development remains incomplete without taking into concern the role of vulnerability and marginality in the society and how these issues are addressed in the contemporary theory and empirics of economic development.
